

SPEAKERS

Dr. Agnes Pál is the coordinator of the CORALL project. She is the academic Erasmus + coordinator of the Faculty of Commerce, Hospitality and Tourism of Budapest Business School, where she teaches Spanish for specific purposes, intercultural communication and skills development courses at the Department of Languages for Business Communication as a senior lecturer.

Prof. Dr. Aleksandra Sudhershan teaches Business and Technical English at the Beuth University of Applied Sciences Berlin, where she is also Head of the Language Competence Centre. Her research interests include ESP, flipped learning, learner autonomy and task-based teaching and learning.

Dr. Tanja Vesala-Varttala works as Principal Lecturer in Marketing and Communication at Haaga-Helia University of Applied Sciences, Helsinki, Finland. Her main research interests include international branding, digital storytelling, education for sustainable development ESD, and collaborative autonomous learning.

Dr. Ildikó Némethová works as associate professor at the Faculty of Applied Languages of the University of Economics in Bratislava. The main areas of her specialisation include intercultural communication, British area studies and English for specific purposes. Her research interests include culture and communication, global leadership, and autonomous learning.

Dr. Réka Asztalos is the Deputy Head of Department of Languages for Business Communication at the Budapest Business School, responsible for study affairs and student support. She teaches courses on Business English, English for Tourism, English Study Skills and Research Methods. Her research interests include blended learning, which was the topic of her PhD dissertation. She is also interested in autonomous learning and how to enhance students' ability and willingness to study independently, including informal learning.

Dr. Alexandra Szénich is a lecturer at the Department of Languages for Business Communication at the Budapest Business School. She delivers courses on Business German, German for Tourism and Research Methods. Her research interests include language testing and autonomous language learning. In 2017/2018 she led a research project on autonomy at the Institute of Languages and Communication at the Budapest Business School investigating students' disposition towards and teachers' beliefs about autonomy

Prof. Dr. Maria del Carmen Arau Ribeiro teaches English language and cultures, M.A. teacher training, and ESP at the Polytechnic Institute of Guarda, Portugal. President of the Portuguese Association for FL Teachers in HE (2004-2014) and the Association of Language Centres in Portuguese HE (ReCLes.pt, 2009-present). Publications in language learning and teaching practice, collaborative autonomy, CLILing, language policy, interculturality, systems and design thinking, interdisciplinarity, and metacognition. European Language Council member (2018-present) and expert HE consultant for the DAAD, Germany (2015-2018), and coordinator of CercleS Focus Groups.

Dr. Monika Hřebačková leads language, intercultural and social competence courses for BSc and MSc students at School of Business of the University of Chemistry and Technology Prague, the Czech Republic. Her area of expertise includes Intercultural Communication Competence, Business English, and Behaviour Competence Development. As a guest lecturer, she has carried out workshops and seminars in Hungary, Finland and Mexico. She is an experienced project coordinator – with her team, she won the award “2018 best international Erasmus+ project in higher education”. She publishes on the topics of innovative teaching and learning.

Dr. Jana Zvěřinová is a lecturer at School of Business of the University of Chemistry and Technology Prague. She teaches courses in English and Spanish with the focus on communication and competence development. In collaboration with an international team of language and content HE teachers, she runs a course of Global Virtual Teams focusing on specific aspects of online teamwork and communication in an interuniversity project. She has also actively participated in several Erasmus+ projects. She publishes on the topics related to her teaching and projects in academic journals and presents at international conferences.

Dr. Martin Štefl received his Ph.D. from the Department of Anglophone Literatures & Cultures at Charles University in Prague in 2014, where he studied English philology and Philosophy. Currently, Martin works at the School of Business of the University of Chemistry and Technology in Prague where he teaches courses in English, focusing on ESP and skills training, in particular on Critical Thinking. He has experience in designing e-learning educational content for non-profit educational institutions. Besides ELT, Martin is professionally interested in philosophy of business, ethics and philosophy of technology and researches into critical thinking and its applications in ELT.